

Conclusion

The HDI Prediction project demonstrates the effective use of Machine Learning to classify countries into Human Development Index categories. By integrating a trained model with a Flask web application, the project provides an easy-to-use platform for making predictions based on socio-economic indicators.

The project highlights the practical application of data science, machine learning, and web development in solving real-world problems.